background history

Originally founded as The London Armoury Co Ltd in 1856, this company was dissolved, reconstituted and incorporated as The London Small Arms Co Ltd in 1866. Like the Birmingham Small Arms Co formed in 1861 (better known today for the vehicle manufacture it commenced in the early twentieth century), it was established by a private consortium of gun-makers in order to compete more effectively with the proposed Royal Small Arms Factory at Enfield, opened in 1857, in the mechanised production of firearms with interchangeable parts for the British government. From 1867 onwards, the London and Birmingham companies maintained an agreement to fix wage levels and product prices, and share contracts for rifle production.

Unlike the Birmingham Company, however, the London Small Arms Co did not successfully diversify its production, and remained a small enterprise. Immediately prior to the First World War, it was producing just 250 rifles a week, compared to three times that number in Birmingham. At the same date, the Royal Small Arms Factory at Enfield was producing 1,000 new rifles and repairing a further 1,000 each week. Following the outbreak of hostilities in 1914, the British government asked both the London and Birmingham companies to step up production. By 1915, however, all the available land on the London Small Arms Co's factory site in Tower Hamlets was used, leaving no room for further expansion. The dissolution of the company was agreed in 1935.
